

Hugh Glass

Group #1

The Expedition

Hugh Glass was a mountain man on a fur trapping expedition.

The expedition was led to the Missouri River, and up the valley of the Grand River in present-day South Dakota

The Bear Attack

- Hugh Glass was attacked by a mother grizzly bear and put into a grave by his partners who thought he was dead.
- He woke up and laid on a dead log for maggots to eat away at his rotten flesh

Making it Back

- Glass survived mostly on wild berries and roots.
- He made a crude raft and floated down the river to where his crew was.

Surviving

- Glass met Indians and they sewed the bear hide over his back to cover the injuries on his back.
- Glass navigated his raft using the Thunder Butte landmark.
- Glass eventually reached to safety in Fort Kiowa.

Courageous

Hugh Glass survived because he was courageous. He wasn't afraid to fight a full-grown bear, even though he was seriously hurt.

- “Using only his knife and bare hands, Glass wrestled the full-grown bear to the ground and killed it...” - The Story Of Hugh Glass

Determined

Hugh Glass was survived because he was determined. He lived on wild berries and roots for six weeks to reach the Cheyenne river, even though he was suffering from major injuries.

“Glass survived mostly on wild berries and roots. Reaching the Cheyenne River after six weeks of travel, he fashioned a crude raft and floated down the river”
